Set in the inspiringly redesigned Whitworth the evening after we learn if it has won this year's Stirling Prize, we'll be discussing how design contributes to the city, the economy and society – in culture and architecture, media, fashion and leading edge technology. The future development of the Corridor and the devolved health and care sector are just two of the big challenges calling for design ingenuity and innovative collaboration between the creative sector, industry and the wider community in Greater Manchester.

The debate will be chaired by Matthew Taylor, chief executive of the RSA, joined by a panel featuring Sir Howard Bernstein, chief executive of Manchester City Council, Lou Cordwell, CEO of Magnetic North, Design Council chief John Mathers and Andrea Siodmok, head of the Policy Lab at the Cabinet Office.

If you have a question or opinion that should be discussed, send a video selfie we can use to debate@designmcr.com.

The Great Debate is sponsored by Shoosmiths and the All Party Parliamentary Design and Innovation Group, supported by Boot Room Communications and Sharp Futures, and hosted by The Whitworth.
